Outside the box

We get behind the free-thinking ethos of Auerberg with its push-the-envelope approach to product design

An experimental product lab for designers, Auerberg was created in 2010 by Christoph Büniger, the designer of the first laptop computer concept in 1982 at Siemens and a contributor to the ClassiCon modern classics range. With a mission statement to design products 'beyond marketing logic and current fashions', designers such as Alfredo Häberli, Tobias Grau and Herbert Schultes are given free rein to come up with designs that are then turned into limited, sometimes tiny, production runs. Here are some of the company's creations that have recently caught our eye. ✪
